In Memorium of Lieut. John D. Mackey.

....."First Lieutenant John D. Mackey, was a native of Wayne county, where his parents now reside. He was known and recognized as an exemplary young man, possessing sterling qualities of character. He was just entering upon his twenty-fourth year when the destroyer seized him, and his loss is sincerely lamented by a wide circle of friends and kindred. We knew him from earlier childhood and always found him the embodiment of kind and gentlemanly virtues. As a soldier, his valor and exceedingly ardent attachment to the Union, were manifest and frequently complimented. He enlisted as a private in Captain Downing's Company, in the 3rd of August, 1862, and served in that capacity until the 15th of April, 1863. He was then appointed Sergeant Major of the Regiment, and occupied that position until he obtained his commission as First Lieutenant, which was in November of the same year. On his final return home – not as he, or his friends anticipated to receive the irrevocable discharge of the grave – he was acting as Adjutant of the Regiment. So prompt was he in the performance of his duty and so eager to be the true soldier, he frequently exposed himself when in bad health, and in this way, no doubt precipitated his doom and departure. He considered no service or sacrifice too great for his country, and often on his death bed was heard to say, 'If the salvation of the country demands my life, I will give it willingly.'

Until the time he was compelled to leave, he had taken part in all the engagements in which the 120th had ever participated. Were he living, Chickasaw, Arkansas Post, Champion Hill, Grand Gulf, Black River Bridge, Jackson, Vicksburg, &c, would be green and fresh in his memory. On the 10th of May, 1863, [actually the 19th May at Vicksburg] he was struck on the shoulder by a fragment of a shell which caused him to retire from the field, being unable to use his sword. In the disastrous affair of last May, owing to the bad management of the commander of the Gulf Department, when the boat was attacked, by the rebels, his Company was ordered to the hurricane deck of the vessel, a place of extreme danger. The consternation was frightful, as may well be imagined, and while there was running to and fro, some leaping overboard, &c., the Lieutenant staid [sic] at his post until he had an opportunity of getting out on the opposite shore, which he accomplished by means of a plank from the boat. And here we believe to be the secret of his sickness and subsequent death. After abandoning the vessel, he tarried with one of his wounded comrades until he lost sight of his fleeing and panic stricken companions, when he began pursuit, exerting himself too violently to over take those who were struggling to escape. Losing his blankets, having to sleep on the cold ground, with no covering but the broad, cheerless canopy of the sky, overtaking his energies that he might avoid the living death of the prisoner, he contracted a cold which settled on his lungs and resulted fatally.

He came home, and after a protracted illness of ten weeks, he expired on the 21st of last September. |

He bore his sufferings like the calm, patient hero and martyr. At times they were poignant and intense, but he endured them all with imperturbable resignation with the exception of brief intervals of delirium, his mind retained its clearness and brilliancy until the last breath was drawn and the throbbing heart was still. For several weeks after his return, he imagined he would recover, yet hope and fear, 'pale trembling daughters of mortality,' kept up painful alteration. When the unwelcome story had to be told, that death was imminent and inevitable, he received it calmly and silently, waiting the last transition without a shudder. This spirit of composure and christian submission was apparent throughout his whole illness, and existed to the very hour when the fettered soul 'raving round the walls of her clay tenement,' burst her shackles of flesh and bones, and winged her unseen flight to Deity.

May his memory ever remain fresh in the hearts of his family made desolate by his early death. He gave his young, precious life for his country, and patriotism like an anguished maiden, will weep and linger at his grave, when she builds the Mausoleum of her heroes. We leave him in the keeping of his God, in whom he trusted.

The funeral cortege has returned; the grave is satisfied; the eye of the weeper begins to brighten; the flag for which he died floats proudly o'er a nation destined soon to be wholly and gloriously free. Now let love and memory do their noble work.

'Green be the turf above him.' B. D.
