Pension Index: William E MONTGOMERY, C 16th, D 114th and A 120th OH Inf. Widow, Martha J. MONTGOMERY, filed in Missouri on 23 Aug 1915, Application 1052062, Certificate 800062. Invalid filed in Missouri, 31 Jan 1883 [or 1893], Application 471071, Certificate 312122. [Note: It says he was in Co. C of the 16th OVI and I do find him listed in that company as being a private, age 23 in 1861 which helps somewhat to clear up the age given on the 1880 census. He entered that company on 22 April 1861 for a term of 3 months and mustered out with the company on 18 Aug 1861. The 16th OVI were on duty guarding railroads in West Virginia and then saw some action in that state [Phillippi, Laurel Hill and Carrick's Ford] before returning to Ohio.]

"The First Amputation of the War.

To the Editor National Tribune:

In your issue of July 12, Comrade T. F. S., of Churchville, VA., expressed a desire to hear from some one who was present at the fight at Phillipi [now in West Virginia] and who witnessed the first amputation of the war (or so said to be). Well, I was there—was a member of the Sixteenth Ohio (three months' men). We crossed the river at Bellaire, and proceeded at once to Grafton, VA., and, after a short stay, made a forced march to Phillipi. We made the most of it after night and oh! the rain, how it did come down. It was hard on men not accustomed to such exposure. At daylight we were quite near our destination. We had halted for a moment to arrange our toilet, when a shot—as we then supposed—from the enemy caused some of our limbs to become a little unsteady, but a prompt command to 'Unslung knapsacks! Forward, double-quick, march!' soon quieted our unstrung nerves and placed us in the town of Phillipi. But the rebels had slipped out, leaving their breakfast for us to eat. In looking around we found a man in a hayloft, with a wounded leg. He had been in the stable below when a ball from one of our guns passed through the stable, striking his leg, and he had crawled up a ladder into the hayloft, and I think, if my memory serves me right, that is where the amputation took place. He was a fine-looking young man. His name I did not learn. He had my sympathies, as he was the first wounded man I had seen. I afterwards became a little more hardened. He appeared to be out of humor, although we were treating him the best we could under the circumstances, and I have often thought of him and wondered what had been his fate. On looking around further we beheld a little band of brave women coming down the hill. They had fled the town for safety, and when all was quiet wished to return, and not having a suitable emblem of peace, one of the more thoughtful disrobed and used an undergarment for the much-desired flag of truce. Placing the garment on a pole, they marched into the town, fully assured that protection would be granted. Now, should this reach the eyes of that lady, she will please pardon me for speaking of the matter. It was quite laughable then, and might cause a smile now. W. E. M., Co A, 120th O. V. I. The National Tribune, 23 Dec 1909, page 8:

"The Ex-Prisoners. Editor National Tribune: It does seem to me that the time has now come when some definite and certain action should be taken by Congress to in some measure recompense the ex-Union prisoners for their sacrifices and sufferings. Ever since they returned, some 43 years ago, they have been at a disadvantage because of those trials and disabilities endured behind the enemy's stockades. The country was saved, the Flag was maintained and great prosperity has come to the land; but, as a rule, the ex-prisoners have had very little share in this. May we not justly appeal to Congress and a grateful people for some compensation to those who suffered all but death and have since borne patiently the trial of their faith and patriotism? Surely it is time they should be remembered. ___ W. E. Montgomery, Co. A, 120th Ohio, Macon, Mo."

W. E. Montgomery

W. E. Montgomery, aged eighty, a long and well known resident of Macon, died at his home in Macon at 2:30 Monday morning. Mr. Montgomery became known a few years ago from one end of the country to the other because of his relation of a little war incident that occurred in the Virginia mountains. He and a few men were ordered to guard a narrow pass during the month of December, 1862. Living near the picket guard in a log cabin was a young woman and her two little girls. The father was away fighting for Bob Lee. The little girls spent much of the time with the Union soldiers. When Christmas came around, Mr. Montgomery rode over to Headquarters and made a requisition for a lot of blankets, provisions and dainties. Then he and his comrades played Santa Claus for the little girls of the Confederate soldier. The story was printed in several of the large papers and soon afterwards Mr. Montgomery received a letter from the granddaughter of the man whose little children the Union soldiers had befriended in winter time. Mr. Montgomery, whose life was characteristic of the little incident that occurred in the Virginia mountains, was always doing good for others.

For many years past his wife had been an invalid and he cared for her as tenderly as though she was a child.
